

GRIMSTAD SHOWS NEW FLYING PICTURES

O. K. Grimstad of the Grimstad & Brown law firm is in receipt of a collection of pictures taken while he was stationed at Pensacola, Fla., in the naval aviation service. The pictures in most cases were taken by Mr. Grimstad himself and they show every type of plane used by the navy during the war.

Owing to the fact that they were not allowed to be released during the war they but recently arrived, but they now may be seen occupying a prominent place on the walls of the owner's office. People entering the place are compelled to stop and admire them for their sheer beauty.

One of the most highly prized pictures of the collection was taken just over the bay at Pensacola and shows a dark storm cloud rolling up over the horizon, against which is silhouetted a plane banking before the sun, half hidden by the clouds. The bay itself is glistening and sparkling from the effects of the rays of the half hidden sun, while in the foreground may be seen an old-fashioned fishing smack with sails set, the boat itself rolled gently to one side as it makes its way toward the shore.
