All special quarantine regulations, which were put into effect by the city, state and county health departments, when infantile paralysis was discovered in Billings, will be raised Saturday, according to information given out yesterday by the local health officers.

Physicians say that the precautionary measures have been unusually effective and that there is not the slightest danger now of an epidemic. In a letter received yesterday from the state board of health the local authorities were commended for their diligence.

As a result of the quarantine being raised public and Sunday schools may resume and after today children of any age may attend theaters and movie shows and patronize ice cream parlors, confectioneries, etc., and ride on street cars.
